The Villager

The Villager is Village 900's printed program guide. The 16-page magazine is packed with interesting, informative, and alternative articles. Past issues have included stories like houses made from dirt, the First Nations archives at the Royal BC Museum, green fuel made from deep fryer oil, urban greenways, and solar energy.

The magazine features interviews with artists and personalities, like musician James Keelaghan, Cortez Island painter June Cameron, and futurist Dr. Derrick de Kerckhove. It also offers sheet music readers can play along to and recipes they can try out, from those to make great soil to exotic dishes from places like Cape Verde.

The Villager is produced three times per year in April, September, and January with 4,000 copies circulated. The guide is available at numerous distribution points located all over Victoria and is mailed to over 150 individuals who made financial donations to the station in the past year. In addition, hundreds of people download The Villager from www.village900.ca.
